Upcoming Sunday Services

February 1: The Gender Games
Rev. Theresa Novak, Worship Leader

Gender roles and rules permeate our culture. What does that mean for us who affirm and promote the inherent worth and dignity of all? Why are people who do not fit the gender norms and stereotypes seen as such a threat? Why is there such violence perpetuated against them? There is a theological explanation and a theological solution.

February 8: What Is Time?
Matt Weinstein, Worship Leader

Matt Weinstein is a student at Starr King School for the Ministry preparing for Unitarian Universalist ministry. Matt is pursuing a call to interfaith university chaplaincy, and has a deep passion for contemporary philosophy and theology. In this Sunday’s service, Matt will share with us some basic philosophical and theological approaches to the seemingly simple concept of time. By the end of the hour, Matt hopes to seriously complicate your understanding of time.

February 15: What's Love Got to Do With It?
Rev. Theresa Novak, Worship Leader

On this Sunday closest to Valentine’s Day we will explore the different types and qualities of love. What does “Love your neighbor” really mean?

February 22: Poetry Service: Social Justice from the Heart
Frances Hilliard, Worship Leader
Holly Harwood, Worship Associate

We are part of a social justice community inspired in our work by the courage, wisdom, compassion and commitment of those we admire. Today you are invited to celebrate those who inspire you.
Dear BFUU Members and Friends,

Time is flying and the weather is warming up already. It feels good despite the fact that we know that a warming climate is not good for our planet.

I thought we had some very good dialogue about BFUU during the question and answer session we held after the service on January 11. Prior to the meeting, I had led a service on “The Family Church,” which explained some of the changes BFUU will need to make if you are going to be able to grow and thrive. If you missed it, it is online on our website. The sermon answers a lot of questions that our membership had about the developmental ministry and what the board and I are trying to accomplish.

Some people who attended the meeting were unable to attend the worship service as well, which was unfortunate. The question of spoken joys and sorrows came up both in the sermon and at the meeting. While it was clear that some folks really missed the practice of individuals in the congregation using the microphone to express their own sorrows and joys, there were others, a majority of those speaking in fact, who were happy that we no longer engage in this sometimes wonderful, but often very problematic practice.

One person spoke very strongly and stated that our worship services must be democratic. I am not sure exactly what they meant by that. Should we vote each week on all the readings and hymn selections? As your minister, I try to craft services that have a particular theme and message and attempt to have everything from the music to the readings, to the time for all ages, reinforce and enhance that theme. The worship associates and musicians often have suggestions, some of which I use, and some of which just don’t fit. I believe this improves the quality of the service, making us more attractive and welcoming to newcomers and more spiritually satisfying and engaging for everyone who attends. Would “democratic” mean that the worship leader has to take every single suggestion that is made, even if it would detract or distract from the theme?

I am beginning to realize that there are some basic misunderstandings here at BFUU about the meaning of democracy. BFUU has operated in family style mode, with decisions made by strong individuals with little, if any, accountability to the membership as a whole. Our fifth principle states “The right of conscience and the use of the democratic process within our congregations and in society at large.” One key word in that principle is process. In our faith tradition, the congregation has the ultimate power and authority. But that doesn’t mean every individual or every group within the congregation can do whatever they want. The membership, in a congregational meeting, convened under the rules described in the bylaws, can make decisions for the entire congregation. Outside of those meetings, only the board of trustees, elected by the congregation to do so, has the authority to make those types of decisions. They can delegate some of this authority and responsibility to other individuals or groups. By hiring me as your minister, they delegated some of that authority and responsibility to me. Certain committees and other staff have also been delegated certain authorities and responsibilities.

Because the board serves the interests of the entire congregation, it is critical that they always keep that in mind and not let themselves be unduly influenced by individuals and small groups that may not reflect the interests of the entire congregation. That is why the deliberations at board meetings should only be for the actual elected board members. Other individuals are welcome to attend and observe, and can ask (or be asked) to be on the agenda to address a specific item, but they are not elected to represent the congregation and should not be part of the actual deliberations. That is how school board and city council meetings are conducted in virtually every jurisdiction. It is how church boards operate in all but some very tiny and often contentious congregations.

So how does the board or the minister know what the congregation as a whole wants or needs? (Those two aren’t always the same!) The answer is conversation with as many and as diverse a representation of the congregation as possible. Many people have given me feedback on the Sunday services, both those I have led and those that are lay led. I listen, and then try to figure out how representative that feedback is and whether or not I should try to make some changes based upon it. Then I think about the mission and goals, what the membership has said they want for the future and consider how the specific feedback fits into that. Sometimes I change things, and sometimes I don’t.

The board follows much the same process, staying in touch with the membership, but also keeping in mind the overall goals and mission of BFUU. The board and the minister are both charged with leadership as well. Leaders are supposed to think about the future and the impact of their decisions on that future and on the overall health of the congregation. If the board or the minister should get really off track, a congregational meeting can always be called to revise or change a prior mandate or delegation of authority.

I hope this helps. The transition from “family-style” functioning to the more organized and frankly more democratic “pastoral-style” is not an easy one. Individuals who have had a great deal of personal power and influence in the past may feel disenfranchised. Some may fight very hard to regain or retain that power. It is a totally normal and understandable reaction, but it doesn’t serve to move us further along the road to a real democratic process that enhance the power of the congregation as a whole. We have so much to offer to those around us. Let’s learn to work together in love.

Blessings to each and every one of you,

Rev. Theresa
President's Report

In response to increased interest in what the Board of Trustees is doing, the Board Minutes will now be emailed to members, once they are approved. Also, Office Coordinator Susan Macke will now post them on the bulletin board each month. Keep in mind that it will take a month before they are approved.

If you feel a need to know what the Board has done about an issue before that time, ask a Board member. There are seven of us.

Also, if you have an issue you want put on the Agenda, talk, email, fax, text, phone or write a letter to me two weeks before the Board meeting. If I consider it appropriate I will put it on the Agenda for Board discussion.

All members are welcome to attend Board meetings. You may observe, ONLY. Do not make comments, emotional outbursts or try to hijack the meeting with personal stories or readings. Please do not disturb Board business. Plan to be silent unless you are already on the Agenda AND are recognized by the Chair.

So that you may know what are appropriate issues to bring to the Board I will quote from the By-laws: “Trustees are responsible for the administration or management of property, finances, employment of all paid personnel, and other affairs of the Fellowship, including the submission of an annual budget to the members of the Fellowship.” And “May adopt By-laws defining their organization, their proceedings, and the conduct of the Fellowship.” In other words, the Board protects the assets of BFUU and makes decisions about BFUU Policy.

Adult RE Survey! The RE Committee is gearing up to provide additional Adult Religious Education classes for the congregation. The first step is to assess what kind of classes you’re interested in. Please fill out the survey that we’ll be handing out at Sunday Services on February 1, 8 and 15, and return it to the Welcoming Table. We hope to begin class(es) soon after we have reviewed the results of the survey.

Valentine's Day Dance
Several BFUU members are working toward holding a Valentine's Day Dance on Saturday, February 14 in the Fellowship Hall. While this is a rental and not a BFUU-sponsored event, there will certainly be members and friends in the crowd - and on the stage! Keep an ear to the ground and an eye on the calendar at www.bfuu.org/events/calendar for more information.

Other events of interest to members
Jazz in the Neighborhood and Acoustic Music Berkeley are still renting the Fellowship Hall for their monthly concerts. Check their web sites for more information on their offerings.
The Social Justice Committee is sponsoring Judith Granada-Dewey's trip to Gaza with the Tree of Life Educational Fund http://www.tolef.org/. We look forward to her report back.

Members of the Social Justice Committee and the congregation went to the Reclaiming King's Legacy March in East Oakland on January 19th, which Seon O'Neill details below.

—Holly Harwood

Report from the Reclaiming King's Legacy March:

I arrived at the Fruitvale Station in Oakland and took a look to see if anybody else from the Social Justice Committee was present. In search, I found various tables, as people were there with various socialist newspapers and books. Also present were people with signs. Eventually I met Holly Harwood near the entry to Fruitvale Transit Village. The walkway was marked with areas where one could park strollers or even paint a sign to carry. We made our way further into the concourse, and when we got to the curb, I took my first picture of the day, a shot of the giant Martin Luther King, Jr. puppet.

We then crossed the street to the rest of the staging area. I heard the distinctively pentatonic beat of Aztec Dancers’ drums; thus I knew Aztec Dancers were performing, although I could only see the feathers in their headdresses. Also present were elaborately costumed young Lion Dancers who were a part of the march.

Before we started our long trek of 5 1/2 miles, we listened to several speakers. We also got our marching instructions. “The truck goes first and the babies will lead the march.” We were instructed to repeat those aloud. Then the young people led us in before the march chants. Shortly thereafter, we took to the street. Accompanied by drumming and chanting, we were en route; a nonviolent, noisy march. As we neared the Coliseum, we noticed that neighborhoods were progressively more rundown.

At about 4 p.m. we arrived at the BART station—in time for a game to be getting out—and for a brief period the BART station was actually closed. From there, approximately 2,000 of us finished the trek to the stadium; then into the chow line—menu included grapes, chips, salad, spaghetti with tomato and garlic sauce, bread pudding, and two dishes containing meat; one with ham, the other lamb. The beverage was a plant-based milk.

Screening the Green Film Series: The Economics of Happiness
Thursday, February 5 at 6:30 PM in the Fellowship Hall—1924 Cedar St.

In The Economics of Happiness filmmaker Helena Norberg-Hodge examines how—in resistance to globalization—communities are successfully relocalizing their economies and treasuring the rich uniqueness of each local place. Discover how communities around the world are coming together to re-build on a more human scale with respect for the environment and the rights and needs of people. We'll hear from voices from six continents, including Vandana Shiva, Bill McKibben, David Korten, Samdhong Rinpoche, Helena Norberg-Hodge, Michael Shuman, Zac Goldsmith and Keibo Oiwa. They tell us that climate change and peak oil give us little choice: we need to localize, to bring the economy home. The good news is that as we move in this direction we will begin not only to heal the earth but also to restore our own sense of well-being.

This event is cosponsored by Transition Berkeley and BFUU’s Social Justice Committee. Suggested donation $5-10. No one turned away for lack of funds.

Conscientious Projector Film Series: Oliver Stone’s Untold History of the United States—Chapter 2 The Cold War
Thursday, February 12 at 7 PM in the Fellowship Hall—1924 Cedar St.

Academy Award-Winning Writer/Director Oliver stone has created a 12-Chapter documentary series which shines light on the major events that have shaped the world as it today. The Social Justice Committee of the Berkeley Fellowship of Unitarian Universalists will screen parts of Chapter 2 which clearly shows today’s crisis of Ukraine, Greece, Korea, Cuba are part of a shared and complicated history.

Critics have called it ambitious, fresh and startling and something that has never been shown before. If you are not familiar with the legislation the National Security Act of 1948, just for starters, please save this date and watch this informative series. You may also sign all 12 chapters out from our Hal Carlstad Social Justice Center Library to show in your home with friends. Phone number of the Justice Center is 510-275-4272 or go on www.bfuu.org for further information.

Suggested donation $5-10. No one turned away for lack of funds.
