Black History Month: Honoring Black History, Building Black Futures

Upcoming Worship Services

February 2: When Schools Fail our Young: A Glimpse into The Contagious Nature of a Poorly Understood Psycho-Emotional Affliction All Too Common Among Urban Youth of Color
Rev. Marsh Agobert (he/him), Worship Leader
We know that most of the ‘behavioral problems’ of urban youths are learned adaptations to their immediate environment. Yet schools and many social organizations are still ill-equipped to adequately recognize even the most common and hence provide effective supports. Can a spiritually based community be of use?

February 9: #Moms4Housing
Minister Cherri Murphy (she/her), Guest Worship Leader
Although displacement happens to everyone, it mostly affects African Americans. Ten years ago, African Americans comprised 40% of the City of Oakland. Today that number hovers around 28%. Of those living on the streets, 70% are African American. This abomination provides a much-needed spiritual response to the Empire’s legal and unjust methods to justify acts of violence and invites us to imagine new practices of belonging for EVERYBODY. Without an intentional practice of “getting free,” our souls are in grave jeopardy of becoming inaccessible.
Our thought partners to support us today are Moms4Housing, the legacy of Dr. Martin Luther King and ancient Hebrew texts, Jeremiah 30. We are going to look at these texts through the hermeneutics of displacement.

February 16: Three Points Toward Raising Racial IQ
Rev. Marsh Agobert (he/him), Worship Leader
Any conversation regarding race indicates controversy, a myriad of historical references, current factoids and a cyclone of emotion. Today we will simplify our quest with a look at three simple points that may help raise our Racial IQ by, well, three points; if we can relax and pay close attention. Fear not.

February 23: Social Justice Through Music
Clovice Lewis (he/him), Worship Leader
This service will focus on the power of music to encourage social justice. Music will take the lead, so be prepared to bring your voice. In addition to music of liberation and justice, Clovice will also offer selections from his new musical about social justice, “Harlem Voices.”
Cleric’s Corner

The Human Capacity to Learn and Adapt

I’m trying to hatch a new plan.

虚地 every Sunday morning that we’re together, I attempt to get you interested in utilizing one of the human species greatest strengths...it may well be its only real leg up in the survival game: our ability to adapt. So far, no takers. None that I know of at any rate. Simply put, I suggest that we give up the game of war in favor of a much less dramatic, yet more favorable and less bloody (at least in the literal sense) expression of service – real communication.

I’ve suggested in several different ways that instead of criticizing, berating, competing with disdaining the people of the Heartland, we ask them (and sincerely) the age-old therapist’s query: “And how does that make you feel?” Ok, granted, I’m one of those, and so you might expect me to come up with that one again...but actually, I hardly ever ask that question. I have more useful items, but the truth is, I DO ask a lot of questions. I can stage entire conversations using only questions...and that’s a worthwhile skill for anyone to develop. Even Social Justice warriors. ESPECIALLY social justice warriors. Why? Because you want to win.

The one called 45 has helped, to some degree, but at what cost? Now that we have everyone’s attention, what do we plan to do with it? Perhaps we try to convince them that our way is best and that they should drop all that they’re trying to express about the quality of their lives. Maybe we make them think they’re idiots who select against their self-interests. Is this working to win the hearts and minds of our adversaries, or are we preaching to the choir? (Those last two questions were real questions – I’d like to hear from you on those).

If we’re not convincing those people outside the Berkeley bubble or the West Coast bubble, or the Coastal Bubbles, then what real Move-America-Forward changing is inspired? (That’s another real question – Please reply to revmarsh@bfuu.org). HOW can we win this battle if we don’t:

• Take it to those who currently don’t vote with us and
• Listen to those who are ‘on the fence.’
• Dissolve the fence, or wall (or whatever we want to call this Great Continental Divide?) and become a nation again. Forget “Make America Great Again.” How about “Make an America would be Great” for a change.
“How can we win this,” is not a trick question. Think about it. In a real blood-war, you begin to outnumber your enemy because you kill them, and they don’t get to oppose you again. Though when you CRUSH them, hopefully they go away. But WAIT! Nope, they didn’t go away because the South is still working to ‘rise again,’ and now the whole Heartland may just side with them, if only because they’re against…well, us. Remember, the civil war broke out exactly because communication stopped, and the South no longer agreed to the Nation’s covenant. After that they rebelled against the rules of the land. They, too, like converted UUs, didn’t need our rules. Never mind the rules, really. That was just the legal jargon to begin a war that was already in the making. So…one more time:

We either communicate or we war. War breaks out in lands ruled by dictators because they suppress all communication…from the start. (Now THAT’S a commitment to war.) And eventually, even with the most oppressive silencing – the people get feisty (btw – a “Feist” is a breed of dog…sorry, just had to throw that in.)

Adapt! Begin by reviewing the SCLC’s original strategy and that strategy’s goal. It was never to crush everyone in the country who didn’t wake up one morning in agreement with them. Ultimately, it was to pass some laws to last long enough to stop the killing of black people long enough to establish some better relations with their Others. Unitarians and Universalists, for example..

So I’m in the process of either hatching a new plan or moving the one from the 50’s to its current-day strategy (depending on how you look at it) – and I need your help. If you want to move the marches and rallying to the next level, let me know.

As a species, we didn’t get this far because we have better claws or longer sharper teeth. We didn’t get here because we’re faster or stronger than the other animals on the veldt. We got here because we can communicate better, plan well, and through co-operation.

As the man says in the song: “Please, talk to me.”

Now, for those of you who’ve made it this far, here are some real words of wisdom for you:

Dear Beloved BFUU,

What a long, strange trip it’s been. As I write this, the Bay Area is ending the 6th annual #96Hours to #ReclaimMLK. Every year at this time I read original pieces from Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., as well as pieces about him and his legacy. Relative to my own life, I read pieces about white liberalism, direct action, and disciplined and coordinated organization. And relative to our religious life, I like to read pieces on beloved community.

Representative John Lewis has a piece in Time Magazine where he talks about how much has changed in his lifetime. Many of us, and people all over the world, are in despair and even feeling like things are getting worse. But I read this piece and I am reminded that Beloved Community means causing necessary trouble and making it uncomfortable to oppressors. Our religion, at its best, is a place where hope and justice and humanity and care for our world are woven fine. We are building the beloved community in real life and in real time, and that is no small endeavor. And I, as a Black UU who grew up in a UU congregation who followed Black leadership, am feeling rejuvenated to know that UUs collectively and individually have played a role in reclaiming MLK’s radical legacy and bending the arc towards justice.

As we enter into Black History/Black Futures month, I encourage us all to read and follow Black leadership, use our principles as an active guide in our lives on a daily basis (you can even workshop them with Rev. Marsh), and spend time reading and meditating to remember what has been, and imagine what could be.

Octavia Butler was a Black author and thinker and science fiction writer who wrote about alternate worlds and possibilities. My favorite book is Kindred, which I recommend heartily. But probably her most known books are the Earthseed series, beginning with the Parable of the Sower, which you may or may not know is a bible reference. But Butler didn’t finish the series. She had a stroke and left several false start manuscripts of the Parable of the Trickster. And as the beginning of the series warned about a demagogue who would ‘Make America Great Again’, I wonder whether the Trickster parable would have also predicted this future we are in and writing.

The Trickster is the ‘wise fool’ who is often funny and clever and has wisdom and learning and nuance. The trickster is often beyond the rules, of gender, or society, or manners. They often have poignant insights and cutting analysis. As we imagine this new world, I encourage you to study tricksters in all traditions. And ask yourself: what necessary trouble do I need to get in to disrupt injustice?

Please mark your calendars for the last weekend in March for leadership training (Friday 3/27, 6-9pm, dinner included), all-congregation training, history and future planning, and meditation for our future (Saturday 3/28, 10am-4pm breakfast and lunch included) and worship Sunday morning, all with our UUA district liaison Reverend Sarah Schurr, with help from board and leadership, Rev Marsh, and our youth. It will also be live-streamed for folks who can’t be there in person and recorded for further learning. We will spend time together looking at the way our past has been written, look at where we are now, and vision the future of BFUU.

As always, I am honored to be in this with you. I am dedicated to keeping the justice legacy of Unitarian Universalism in general and of BFUU in particular alive and thriving. May we be safe. May we be well. May we know joy. May we be free. In solidarity, wisdom, nuance, and playfulness, Ira X

Maggie Cox

We were very saddened to hear that our snowbird, Maggie Cox, passed away on November 1, 2019 in Ottawa, Canada. She is survived by her children Tory, Andrina, and Sara; grandchildren Eva and Alden; sibling Erling; cousins, niece, and nephews. Maggie taught pottery at Abbotsford & Ottawa Tech. She and her late husband, Dr. Bruce Cox, were longtime members of First Unitarian and founding members of Unitarian Universalist Fellowship in Ottawa. Maggie will always be known for her lively conversation, gourmet food (she made the dishes and their contents!) and wonderful hospitable nature. She attended BFUU in the winter months for many years. We will miss Maggie very much.

Thanks to Adele Ernstrom for letting us know about Maggie’s passing.

Marianne “Jolly” Robinson

The memorial service on Saturday, Jan. 18 for Marianne “Jolly” Robinson honored a beloved longtime member who played many roles in her life—singer, guitar player, poet, journalist, editor, and photographer. At the age of 91, she was BFUU’s Poet Laureate and still contributed to the Communicator which she had edited for many years.

The service filled Fellowship Hall with family members, friends, and political colleagues, who came together to celebrate her life and share their grief.

Rev. Marsh Agobert, one of Marianne’s current ministers, and Rev. Kurt Kuhwald, a former minister, spoke of the two poles of her life—living life as it actually was while working with the justice communities to make life what it ought to be.

Many people who had sung with Marianne for decades lifted their voices in songs of celebration and protest from Pete Seeger and Woody Guthrie.

Marianne’s musical talents were passed on to her daughter, Vickie Sue Robinson, who became a well known singer before her untimely death.

Tom Schultz, her partner of 50 years, brought a light touch to the service: “Marianne and I had considered marriage but we didn’t want to rush into anything.” Her nephew Coby shared heartwarming stories of how Marianne’s visits brought great joy (and food!) to he and his siblings when they were younger. Her niece provided most of the delicious food, including a beautiful heart-shaped homemade carrot cake. We still miss Marianne, but she had a lovely farewell party.
The BFUU Choir had its second annual Christmas caroling outing on December 21, 2019, this time followed by a gathering organized by Christine with cocoa and a White Elephant Gift Exchange in the Fireside Room.

Like last year, we gathered outside the Fellowship Hall and a dozen or so intrepid singers then set off around the neighborhood of BFUU to sing favorites like “Frosty the Snowman” and “It Came Upon the Midnight Clear.”

The first time we did this was last year, and I remember it starting out in a pretty humorous way, though it seems funnier now that I look back on it than when it was actually happening. Last year, when I started knocking on peoples’ doors, there were no answers from the first couple of doors. And when I started off for the next house, a few folks started to get visibly nervous.

“Hey, Susan, maybe people won’t want to be disturbed.”

“We don’t want to offend anyone!”

“Is she really going to keep knocking on doors?”

I felt fingers tugging at my sleeve trying to hold me back and voices expressing a desire to just sing in the middle of the street since then “people would hear us and come out if they wanted to.”

“OK, you all,” I said. “Has no one here actually gone Christmas caroling before?” I looked at the faces near me, and their eyes were wide as saucers, fear and uncertainty plainly written in their expressions.

“I’m not going to stop you from singing in the street, but I myself am going Christmas caroling the way you’re supposed to,” I stated firmly, “This is what you do—you knock on people’s doors, and if they don’t want to hear a song, they just tell you. It’s not a big deal. No one is going to hear us if we sing in the middle of the street. They’re probably planted in front of the TV blasting away.”

I set off to knock on more doors, and I could hear the little band of objecting voices trailing after me, becoming more insistent and worried.

“No, Susan! We’re going to just sing in the street.”

“What if they don’t like it!”

Thankfully, someone answered a door soon, and they welcomed a song. The band of carolers then got the courage to come up to the door, and we sang a lovely version of “Away in a Manger.” The people beamed in smiles at us, nodding their heads in time to the music and thanked us heartily afterwards.

That quieted the complaining and fearful voices for awhile, though now and then worried objections rose up at continuing to knock on doors when we came across inevitable stretches of homes where no one answered.

“Ooh, they’re inside but not answering! I can see them through the window—sitting figures watching TV!”

“We’re not wanted!”

“We’d better just sing in the middle of the street.”

Sheesh.

Then we got to a house where a young mother with a baby came to the door. They expressed enthusiasm at having a Christmas carol sung for them and a couple of others joined them from inside. They requested “Silent Night” and we sang a lovely version with harmonies and ukulele accompaniment.

The mother repeatedly thanked us and tears welled up in her eyes and rolled down her cheeks. We were very moved by this.

When the door shut and we made our way towards the sidewalk, we congratulated each other for spreading the spirituality and joy of the holiday season.

“Oh yeah! We made her cry!”

“That was so awesome!”

Some people gave each other high fives.

We are a deeply spiritual bunch.
That success stopped the complaining about actually knocking on doors, for which I was very, very grateful. This year, I was hoping for no repeating of the previous year’s objections to door knocking, but we had a couple of newbies join us for the Christmas caroling outing. And when I started off for the first door, I heard a fearful voice say to me. “Oh, oh! You’re not actually going to knock people’s doors are you? Maybe we should just go in the middle of the...” “Stop right there, please,” I said, holding up a hand. “This is how you go Christmas caroling!” and I marched off for the first door. Thank goodness, we quickly came across someone who was home and they loved our rendition of “Feliz Navidad,” which stopped further objections to door knocking. This time I also played my fiddle and Brett brought his portable keyboard in addition to the ukuleles, so the neighbors got a deluxe version of carol music this year. Some of the neighbors remembered us from last year, and two of them offered us cookies. Bob, a neighbor who has started playing ukulele with us had even made a special point of baking gluten-free cookies for us. The cocoa and White Elephant Gift Exchange gathering afterwards in the Fireside Room was a wonderful end to the evening of caroling. The caroling experience reminded me of how technological advances have actually resulted in our becoming more separated from each other in many ways, and even sometimes promotes some fear of reaching out and connecting in person to our neighbors. I felt that our little caroling outings were a way of working to build community again, one neighbor and one heartfelt song at a time. Hope you can join us next time!

Jimi Lee Evins Art

We enjoyed an interesting talk and walk on Sunday Jan 19th with Jimi Lee Evins, through the exhibit of his art currently installed in our Fellowship Hall. Jimi Lee is an Artist, Art Educator and Cultural Arts Warrior, whose works can be seen in galleries throughout California. If you missed the reception, you can still catch Jimi’s powerful, meaningful, and intriguing works of art in Fellowship Hall for the next few weeks.
